

Living overseas is not an easy choice and hard to belong to be a society member. I came to New Zealand alone, and I have had a sort of homesickness as well. I would like to overcome myself and it sometimes did not work. Fortunately, I got wise teachers around me. Therefore, they support me to grow up myself and be mature in my behaviour. Of course, I am still making a few troubles, otherwise, they pay attention to what I say and give me some advice on objectivity. Not only teachers help me but also my friends in New Zealand, support me a lot. I sometimes behave on the spurs of the moment. Whenever I try to be impulsive, my friends make me calm down and lead me to the right way to solve the problem rationally. Even though I am older than my mates around me, they seem more mature. I could also feel like I am influenced by them and get some lessons every single day.
